Alta-Pacific Elevator Received New Wheat

The first load of wheat to be delivered this year was received by the Alberta Pacific elevator Saturday last. The wheat was brought in by Noah Swain, and graded No. 2 Northern. Mr. Swain cut the grain with a swather on Thursday, August 27th and threshed it with a combine Saturday last. The field had suffered from hail on three occasions, but still yielded 13 bushels to the acre.

Knox United Church Sunday School Picnic

The annual picnic of the Knox United Church Sunday School was held in the grounds of the Old School of Agriculture on Monday afternoon. The members of the school to the number of 75 gathered at the church and were conveyed in cars provided by members of the church to Olds.

The afternoon was spent in games and sports and in the evening a picnic supper was served. Coffee, cream and dishes were kindly provided by the officials of the O.S.A. and members of the Ladies Aid provided lots of ice cream. The youngsters all declare they had a splendid time.

Golf Tournament.

The tournament which has occupied the local golf players for the last few weeks has come to its final stage. The finals of the first two flights have been played this past week but the last half of the final for third flight has still to be played.

In the finals of the first flight, J. McGehee won over Bob Kubank and Bert Cressman beat Tommy Johnson in the second flight. W. G. Liesemer and J. Kirby are in the final for the third flight but have the last half of their game to play.

Dairy Creamery Wins At Ottawa

Didsbury Creamery have been consistent winners in the exhibitions held throughout Canada during the season.

At the Ottawa Exhibition they obtained first prize for 20 lbs. prints which was their only exhibit. At Brandon and Vancouver they won second prizes and at Victoria they obtained two second prizes. They also won third prizes at Regina, Vancouver and Victoria.

In these exhibitions they were in competition with the leading creameries throughout Canada and the results obtained are a great credit to our local creamery and also reflects credit on the patrons for the quality of the cream they are supplying to the creamery.

Baseball Meeting.

The baseball meeting called to wind up the business for the season on Thursday night, was poorly attended.

The manager, in his report showed that from a player's standpoint the season had been very successful and excellent ball had been played by the local team. He pointed out that they had lost only two home games during the season.

The financial statement showed that gate receipts had not been as high as the previous year and the balance sheet showed a deficit of $130.00. At the beginning of the season a number of business men and baseball fans signed a guarantee to cover any deficit and they will be called on to contribute about $5.00 each.

90% Cutting Done, Southern Alberta

Wheat cutting is 90 percent completed in southern part of the province and in the Peace River district, according to Hon. George Headley, minister of agriculture and health. In Central and Northern Alberta where continued rains have delayed ripening and harvesting, not more than 50 percent of cutting has been done. Threshing is well advanced in the south.

In the area lying south of Calgary and west of Lethbridge, many of the summer-fallows are yielding from 25 to 30 bushels of high grade wheat. Yields from spring cultivated lands are light. Threshing is in progress in the Peace River district and yields are satisfactory, but quality has suffered from the heat and drought during the ripening period. Very little frost damage is reported.

Oats and barley have ripened rapidly during the past ten days and a considerable acreage has been cut. Yields of coarse grain will be satisfactory in all parts of the province, with the exception of the east-central and south-eastern areas.

An excellent second cutting of alfalfa has been harvested in the irrigated districts. Alfalfa and sweet clover seed crops give evidence of heavy yields. Potato crops are in satisfactory condition.

THE FAMILY

To Observe Thanksgiving Monday, October 12th

Thanksgiving Day will be celebrated this year on October 12th. Official announcement of the passing of an order in council to this effect was made Saturday. The necessary proclamation will be issued shortly.

Fixing a date by order-in-council for the observance of Thanksgiving Day, separate from Armistice Day, or what is now known as Remembrance Day, under a bill passed at the last session of parliament, is a departure from the former practice. While Remembrance Day will be commemorated each year on November 11th, the separate date for observance of Thanksgiving Day will be fixed each year by order-in-council.

Word was received at Red Deer Tuesday night that James Hazlett, of the Rural district has been awarded the Alberta championship for 1931 for the best field of standing grain in the provinces-wide competition. Mr. Hazlett won the championship for southern Alberta and his field was then awarded top place over the winner of the northern section of the province.

Cures For Depression

Among the thousand and one articles, speeches and interviews to which the people have been treated on the all-pervading subject of the existing economic and financial depression, there has at last appeared one courageous individual who preaches the rather unpopular doctrine that continued depression might be a good thing for the country.

The man advancing this opinion is George Richardson, newly-elected president of the National (United States) Association of Purchasing Agents, which organization, it is stated, represents the material buying power of the big republic to the south. Mr. Richardson takes a sharp rap at the professional optimist and the nostrum specialist in a special message to the members of his organization in the course of which he says:

"We are now in the second year of a corrective period, which in the judgment of many of us is a wholesome and much needed reminder that there are basic economic as well as moral laws which do not change with the seasons, and are not affected by mob psychology; and, when flagrant disregard for these laws attains the proportions witnessed prior to the close of 1929, the measure of retribution which is meted out to us is in proportion to the extent of their breach." Then follows his declaration that "it might be very beneficial in establishing a sound foundation for permanent recovery to have this period of fast and abstinence continue for awhile. There is no substitute for intelligence, hard work and close application to business."

Mr. Richardson, who thinks constantly in terms of buying rather than selling, finds that "business men need to have it borne in on them that they cannot get and hold something for nothing," and that "a return to hard work and a less extravagant living" are the only possible antidotes to "existing unsound tendencies which are manifest on every hand."

Contrasted with this statement of hard work and less extravagant living, which latter means less spending, is the view expressed by a writer in a well known Canadian financial paper. He says: "It has been stated that the solution of the present depression is hard work, economy and thrift. This has a nice sound but, unfortunately, the people who advance it do not clearly appreciate what the true effect of their recommendation would be. Hard work means producing and putting on sale a large quantity of commodities as we did in 1929. Economy and thrift mean spending as little as we can of our annual income and saving the rest. Doubtless by strict economy we could live on three billion dollars and save one billion of the four billion production in 1928. But if a four billion dollar production is put on sale and we offer only three billion for it, prices must be lowered and the producers accept a loss of one billion dollars. Then as only three billions were received, the producers will be forced to reduce wages and the opportunities for employment it can offer in the future by one billion dollars. Thus economy and thrift create the conditions that precipitate a depression."

Now, in our humble opinion, there is something to be said for both these points of view. Hard work we consider essential in this world. Extravagance should be curbed and by extravagance we mean expenditures on non-essentials, or even on essentials beyond the ability of the buyer to pay for, and consequently running into debt. Thrift, not miserly hoarding, is wise and necessary, but it should not be carried to the extreme of denying one's necessities, reasonable pleasures, and on what may be termed luxuries. Protection against old age, possible sickness, and an ultimate loss of earning capacity, in a word, assurance of a future competence is all that is required. The trouble is, and prior to the close of 1929 it became widespread, that thousands of people do aim to get and hold something for nothing. It simply cannot be done. We must pay for what we get. Speculation ran riot, hundreds of thousands of people bought on the installment plan beyond their ability to pay. The inevitable crash followed, and the depression was upon us.

There is a happy medium between the extremes of spending one hundred cents of every dollar earned, even going into debt beyond one's ability to pay, and miserly living in fear of the future and hoarding every possible dollar. That happy medium is to be found in (1) living within one's income; (2) small but regular savings; and these not miserly hoarded but wisely invested in order that they may be available to expand industry, create employment, in a word, perform their proper function in the world; (3) expand one's expenditures in keeping with increase of income. In other words, every one's dollars should be kept busy.

To illustrate: Industry and we include agriculturists' produces. It pays for raw materials, wages, transportation, distribution, etc. The wage-earners, in turn, buy the goods and foodstuffs thus produced. Thus the money paid out in wages returns to industry, to again be paid out in wages, to again return to industry. The more frequently a dollar is thus turned over, the greater the production, the larger the total of wages paid, the greater the business turnover of the nation, hence the greater the prosperity, and the absence of a depression.

This, we believe, is sound economics and good finance. It is, however, necessary to add that while the above observations apply to industry generally, including agriculture, there are seasonal conditions, such as the present widespread crop failure, which cannot be overcome even by the hardest of hard work, the strictest economy and thrift. These exceptional conditions must be met by exceptional remedies. They are, however, exceptions which do not nullify the truth and strength of the general policy to which expression has been given.

Could Not Check the Summer Complaint A Few Doses Did It

Mrs. R. Coulter, 918 11th Ave. E., Calgary, Alta., writes: "Last summer my youngest son was very bad with summer complaint, and everything he ate he would vomit, and he got so thin I became very much worried. I could not get the diarrhoea checked, so I went to the drugist and he gave me a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and told me it would stop the trouble if anything would. After I had given the boy the first few doses I noticed the diarrhoea were being checked, and he was not long before he was well again."

Cruise Was Successful

Dr. Eckener Satisfied With Zeppelin Trip To Arctic

Home from the top of the world after a week's cruise, the Graf Zeppelin, headed at Friedrichshafen, Germany, amid lusty cheers of thousands who flocked to the airfield instead of going to work.

"It was a splendid and highly successful cruise," Dr. Eckener said. "Some people may have thought we were out in a dreadful region of ice and extreme cold. But from the very beginning we never doubted for a moment that this would be a relatively easy trip. Often we enjoyed skates of Italian ice and we never were bothered by the discomforts of the Arctic."

"Many people thought we did not accomplish all we set out to do, but perhaps we did not mean to do all. I hope this cruise will have a two-fold result, namely, that we may soon make another journey to the Arctic when we can get the necessary funds together, and that the Graf Zeppelin will become a favourite with tourists who feel the call of the north."

How To Read a Book

Lord Macaulay said: "When a boy I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed. But I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now, after I have read a book through once, I can almost recite it from the beginning to the end."

Does Away With Guesswork

New Device Is X-Ray and Radium Meter

The "X-Ray Yardstick," a device to make use of X-rays and radium safer, was adopted by the Third International Congress on Radiology at Paris.

The device is a portable machine which measures the "dosage" of X-rays accurately. It is an X-ray and radium meter. Its adoption means that for the first time there is a standard unit for use in all countries in measuring short-wave radiation.

The importance of this agreement lies in the destructive powers of X-ray and radium, an overdose being as bad as too little, and occasionally even fatal. The difficulty with X-rays has been worse than with radium because the intensity of radiation varies greatly with differences in the numerous varieties of X-ray tubes.

There has been necessarily much guesswork, and also sometimes confusion among radiologists in one nation about applying the progress of their fellow workers in another part of the world.

The meter was developed by Dr. Lauriston H. Taylor, of the United States Bureau of Standards.

The Prince Of Wales Greets Delegates To The Congress Of Universities Of The Empire

The Prince of Wales, greeting to the delegates to the Congress of Universities of the Empire in the Guildhall, London, England, recently was a Royal welcome in more than one sense and it was received with evidence of hearty approval. His Royal Highness began his address as president of the congress (which held its business meetings in Edinburgh, Scotland, a few days later) by reading a message which he had sent the King and His Majesty's reply thereto, the one lavishly and devotion and the other expressing pleasure and welcoming the delegates, especially those from overseas.

The Prince recalled the fact that the eight universities of a century ago had become to by the time the first congress met, and the delegates now assembled or assembling come from 70 different universities. Nearly 90 of them have crossed the seas to attend the congress.

The core of the Prince's subject was the need of educated men today, not only to fill high official posts everywhere in the British Empire, but to serve our commerce and industry vital needs at home and abroad. In a special word of welcome to the overseas visitors he spoke of the "other and better ties" among them the universities, which, he liked to think, were displacing those more material links now fast disappearing, which had bound the empire together in the past.

"With the growth of our population, our commerce, and our national wealth has grown the need for advanced education, until nearly every great city possesses its university." His Royal Highness said, "the same time, the duties and responsibilities of universities have increased in equal measure. The need of men today is greater than ever. Year by year, as the scope of our activities increases, men are called to every part of the empire, not only to fill the higher offices, the services, and the government and municipal administrations, but to carry on the commerce and industry which are vital to our existence."

"I particularly welcome the presence of so many delegates from overseas, because the old concrete ties which joined our empire together in the past are fast disappearing, and I like to think that they are being replaced by other and better ties, which, though less formal, less tangible, in Burke's words, 'though light as air are as strong as links of iron.' Among those links surely there can be none stronger or sounder than the universities of the empire. We have a common history and to a great extent community of race and language, of tradition and of interests. This congress adds the advantage of personal contact and enables us to meet together in social and intellectual intercourse, and to talk over the common problems which beset us all. In a word, it gives us an opportunity of co-operation which is quite as valuable an education as it is to my mind, in most of the other phases of our lives. And it seems to me that you have it in your power not only to contribute to the solution of educational problems, but to strengthen the organization and to draw closer the finest ties of empire."

The tiger will not eat an animal not killed by himself.

Lamps Of The Ages

Museum At Munich, Germany, Has Most Interesting Collection

The German museum at Munich has added an interesting feature to its exhibits in the shape of a collection of street lamps. The collection starts with the most direct light used in Paris, a pitch bucket. The oil light is represented by an old rapped oil lamp. The third, a gas light with five flames, was used in London in 1814. The collection includes lights up to the most modern incandescent lamps.

THIS SPORTIVE JACKET DRESS—SO VOUGISH THIS SEASON

An exceptionally attractive model is this with freshness and charm, so beloved by youth.

The dress was developed in pale blue crepe silk with royal blue dots. There were narrow bindings at the neck and armholes. The jacket reversed the colour scheme to carry out snappy contrast in royal blue with pale dots. The lighter tone crepe appeared again as trim on the jacket.

And it's so easily copied. And at a surprisingly small cost.

Style No. 314 is designed for sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust.

Pastel flat washable crepe silk, shantung in plain or printed, linen, cotton muslin, wool jersey and slating fabrics also suitable.

Size 36 requires 3½ yards 38-inch with 2½ yards 36-inch contrasting. Price of pattern 25 cents in stamps or coin (coin is preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

Might Let Them Try

Question Is Would Women Rule Country Better Than Men

Somebody in Portland suggested the other day that, since men had made such a hash of running the country, it was about time to give the women a chance.

Somebody else replied that women had a majority of the votes already, and if they wanted to run the country, they could do it. He (yes, of course, he was a man) said that women were quite content with "their place in the home."

Then the war began. Letters to the editor, pro and con, filled the columns of the papers.

One woman said that if her sex were running the country they would at least not let people starve. She was probably right. That's just the sort of thing a woman would think of first.

It's the sort of thing that Mary Ellen Smith, Agnes MacPhail, Nancy Ager, Margaret Bondfield, and their sister parliamentarians keep harping on, to the annoyance of their male men colleagues.

Should women rule? There have been some women monarchs, Elizabeth, Victoria, Catherine the Great and others. But they had male advisers. The women have never had a complete innings of their own.

Would Canada be a better country if the House of Commons had 24 Agnes MacPhails and only one Bachelor Bennett raising a feeble voice for his sex from the back benches? Would a city council, all women, make a better job of running Vancouver? Vancouver Sun.

Reach Remarkable Age

Triplets, 56 Years Old, Live On Three Continents

Exceeding the proverbial three score and ten by an additional 26 years, Charles Mayhew, the eldest by three-quarters of an hour of boy triplets, is shortly to celebrate his 56th birthday. Mayhew's two brothers live in Canada and Australia, thus making the veteran triplet combination an empire-grown product.

Charles Mayhew lives in the King's Cross district of London, England, and was formerly Charles Dickens' shoemaker. Mayhew says that in Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend" there is a picture of him at his work.

The finish of the Russian war is named by Mayhew as the most glorious day of his life. St. Paul's was lit up in celebration of the occasion; the whole shape of the cathedral was there in gashlight. Mayhew sang at the funeral of the Duke of Wellington. As a boy he sang at St. Clement Danes.

Mayhew worked at his trade until he was 85. He eats, as he puts it himself, "everything that comes to hand." He has a standing challenge to any man to open to him over 50 to walk to the Cambridge, a distance of about fifty miles. Mayhew will use a pair of shoes made at his own bench. He expects to be 110th birthday in good health.

The March Of Grasshoppers Which Ravage The Countryside Is One Of Nature's Mysteries

J. V. McAree, in Mail and Empire

Not living in Nebraska which is being ravaged by a plague of grasshoppers which has already done millions of dollars worth of damage, one can view the thing as a phenomenon rather than as a calamity. The stories from Nebraska tell of trees, grass, clothing and even posts being devoured by the myriads of insects as they pursue their unpredictable path for ends that remain wrapped in mystery. It is a common notion that grasshoppers swarm over a countryside in search of food. This is no more true than it is true that the occasional migration of the lemming are occasioned by a sudden and uncontrollable desire to have a swim. The death of the lemming in the ocean, and the destruction of the crops in the path of the grasshoppers seem to be mere incidents to a deeper mystery which perhaps is connected with the migration of birds which science has yet been unable to explain. Perhaps it is the same urge in the golden plover, the Arctic tern, the little redstart of Scandinavia and the grasshopper in Nebraska. One may be observed as a beautiful phenomenon, while the other may be a natural disaster comparable to an earthquake or the eruption of a volcano.

Some months ago there was an article on Asia by R. W. G. Hingston, the famous English explorer, who has observed grasshoppers in flight or on the march in different quarters of the world. Major Hingston says: "Their wanderings have no relation to food. They do not pick out the luxuriant places; the arid soil appears to suit them every bit as well as does the greenest tract. They march past places rich in food, scarcely heeding them beyond nibbling a little, and on to barrenness once more. Indeed when actively on the march they will not stop even to nibble if they come upon some luscious patch." It is by day that the hoppers show activity. When night falls they halt and spend the hours of darkness either upon the plants they happen to have lit upon or under stones or chaps. When it becomes light again they begin to stir, and soon are once more on the march. This observer has calculated that they advance a mile in about three hours. They travel alternately by creeping or jumping, all headed in the same direction.

If one regards the main body as an advancing lake of colour, he will find parallel with it several other lesser bodies like streams. These are made up of grasshoppers, too, moving in the same direction as the chief host. On the march they not only do not appear to be on the lookout for fresh pastures, but they indulge cannibalistic practices which are not observed at other times. If one of them is injured the others will immediately attack it, drawing from the body whatever juices it may contain. Major Hingston, struck with the fact that no matter how isolated from the mass some of the hoppers might become, they still maintained their sense of direction, caught a few and whirled them round in a tin box, thinking that they might be disoriented. But as soon as they were turned loose, they resumed their old course, faithful as the needle to the pole. Can these swarms have any connection with the metamorphosis which the insects undergo? The fact that they occur before the final moult is interesting.

A locust moult five times, and it is only with the final moult that its wings are capable of bearing it through the air. Before they develop it remains a hopper. Then it advances a stage, and its wings are suitable for carrying it forward, for short distances on the principle of a glider. Presently they become strong and it can soar in the air. Usually a swarm advances, it will be seen, if kept under observation, that the flying insects keep on increasing, so that a body which set forth composed exclusively of hoppers may reach its destination as a winged host. This is one of the most thrilling sights of nature. This immense army whose numbers must be reckoned in the thousands of millions literally fills the sky. Its progress is curious for while the insects seem to be headed in one direction they really advance at right angles to it. The depth of the swarms can only be guessed at but it may be two miles thick, and because of different air currents the various strata are often seen to advance at different rates of speed.

Sometimes the whole mass will be seen suddenly to change its direction as though upon a common impulse. Stragglers reaching the same spot hours afterwards will be seen to turn as though a guide post had been left for them. For centuries mankind has been trying to cope with the locust plague, and in recent years with the invention of poison gases and flame throwers have met with more success than for thousands of years earlier. The time to attack the insects is before they have sprouted their wings. Trenches can be dug in their line of march and the locusts destroyed as they tumble into them. Efforts to exterminate them by digging up the ground in which their eggs are laid have met with only partial success. Once they have finished their fifth moult and have taken to wing they are impossible to deal with, and the only hope is that they may take their way out to sea like the lemmings and return no more.

Victory For The Snail

Word comes from London that the creature which is known the world over for its sluggishness, the snail, has won a victory over the world's fastest vehicle, the airplane. The British Royal Air Force held at Lake Habbaniya, near Bagdad, recently became overrun with countless snails. After all other means had been tried to get rid of the creatures, the Royal Air Force had to pick up, bag and baggage, including flying machines and all equipment, and move to another base.

Quality West's Wheat Reported As High

The most favorable factors in the western crop situation are the satisfactory state of grains in the northern area and indications to date that the general quality of western wheat will be high, says the survey of the summary by the Canadian Bank of Commerce. Eastern Canadian crops are almost uniformly good, reports the latter.

Although business is without great vitality, the report proceeds, it is not so weakened that it cannot make a strong showing in the records of world business, or take advantage of any favorable openings.

Along with continual industrial retrogression, with crop damage in western Canada and unremunerative prices during the past summer, there have been such good counter-influences as good crop conditions over the greater part of eastern Canada, an increase in construction work in recent months, an active tourist trade and lower production costs.

"Hell-Fire Jack" Visits Canada

Visiting Canada for the purpose of officiating at the opening of the Canadian National Exhibition and presiding over the 5th Biennial conference of the British Empire Service League, Admiral of the Fleet Earl Jellicoe, hero of Jutland, former Governor General of New Zealand and friend of ex-servicemen the world over, arrived at Quebec on Saturday, August 22nd, on board the Canadian Pacific liner "Duchess of York." The accompanying picture shows the famous British sailor on the ship's flyer bridge, as he took the salute of two warships in Quebec harbor, which "dressed ship" and cheered their former chief to the skies. True, at Canada's principal port, "Hell-Fire Jack" found the pleasure of his own beloved navy added to those of the public of Canada, while a shore battery honored him as a whole.

"Fanny, The Meat Eating Cow."

By MAIN JOHNSON

A Special Article taken from the Toronto Weekly Star issued
Saturday, September 5th.

Just before I went west on a trip this summer, I read in an Associated Press dispatch of a meat-eating cow in Didsbury, Alberta. I made a note of it and decided to see this phenomenon during my travels.

I had to make an address at a banquet in Edmonton which the Robt. Simpson Company was giving to the Alberta postmasters. I said I had come west for two reasons: to speak at this dinner and to see the meat-eating cow of Didsbury.

The president of the Alberta postmasters happened to be Mr. Morgan of Didsbury, a very pleasant and a very able man. When it came his turn to speak at the banquet, he smiled and said he did not know what I was talking about; when he left Didsbury Sunday night to come to Edmonton, there had been no such thing as a meat-eating cow in

We saw Fanny actually eating meat that day this summer when we were in Didsbury. If you have the idea that she is greedy, beefsteak served on a platter with horseshoe and French fried potatoes and gravy, you are much mistaken. If you picture her being given thick slices of ham in brown bread, sandwiches, young picture is wrong, but it is meat all the same that Fanny eats.

We have told you enough to show you that Norman Clarke was a true pioneer that first day when he fed meat to Fanny on January 15th, 1931. There were no precedents. The cow might take a bit, turn into a ball, or laugh like a horse!

But no such catastrophe occurred. At first, indeed, Fanny turned up her nose at the meat and it had to be hidden skillfully in other food, but gradually Fanny grew to like it.

Two days later we motored into Didsbury determined to solve the mystery. We saw Mr. Morgan on the main street, he had just returned from Edmonton and had not had time to make inquiries as to whether or not Didsbury deserved the fame I was trying to give it.

"Are there any well-known heads around here?" I asked.

"Yes," replied Mr. Morgan, "there are the Didsbury Jersey Farms west of here that Norman Clarke owns."

"Who is Norman Clarke?"

"A pioneer in this part of the world, a scientific farmer who has been a member of several government agricultural boards."

"Suppose we phone him about the cow"—which we did.

"You mean Fanny," Clarke said, and I remembered "Fanny" was the name of the cow mentioned in the dispatches.

Mr. Clarke's son, Everard came into town to guide us to the ranch. And there we did see, Fanny, the meat-eating cow, a beautiful Jersey heifer, one of the best bred animals in Canada, a perfect dairy type.

"The fact that Postmaster Morgan did not know about the prodigy at Didsbury should not be held against him. It is just the old case of a prophet being not without honor save in his own country."

The fact that I have seen a meat-eating cow seems to have impressed those who have heard of it and I have been asked more questions than about any of my other animal adventures since the days of Baby Stella. Sometimes the story has grown into a "meat-eating" cow, but "meat-eating" is sufficient.

The only person who was not thunderstruck was a young lady who did not see why there was so much excitement about a meat-eating cow. Wasn't that a regular thing? Didn't all cows eat meat? Hay, to most people it was a wild tale, a meat-eating cow indeed! Whoever heard of such a thing! Sounded like a cannibal!

It was on January 15th of this year that Norman Clarke first gave meat to Fanny. As far as he knows it is the first meat ration ever fed to a cow in the history of the world's dairy industry. In April of this year, Inspector Green, of the Dominion Government's record of production, staff tested Fanny's milk on samples from four milkings and to his amazement found .98 per cent. butterfat, a world's record. He thought there must be some mistake and made another test with the same astonishing results. 10 per cent. is cream. Fanny's milk was within one-fifth of one per cent. of being cream!

more and more and when we saw her fed a few weeks ago, she snuffed around eagerly and into the meat first, her mouth watering with pleasure.

The first form of meat Mr. Clarke gave to Fanny was meat-scrap. Soon after, he had this meat-scrap ground into meat and it is in the form of meat that Fanny now gets her ration. But whatever its form, it is honest-to-goodness meat.

There is more than mere curiosity and human interest in this story of Fanny, the meat-eating cow. There is an economic significance that is important during the depression.

An Economic Experiment

Mr. Clarke did not begin giving meat to Fanny for fun, but because, with the dismal low price to be obtained this year for butterfat, something drastic had to be done about production costs to make any profit.

And here is the point of the story: the butterfat produced by Fanny during this spring, with the meat ration, cost only five cents a pound for feed!

Appointment of W. R. Patterson to be deputy general auditor, Canadian Pacific Railway, is announced by E. E. Lloyd, Comptroller of the railway. He is succeeded in his late position of auditor of disbursements by Charles H. Gordon. Mr. Patterson is one of the younger men holding important offices in the Canadian Pacific Railway, having been appointed auditor of disbursements four years ago at the age of 26. Mr. Gordon was comptroller of the Kettle Valley Railway in British Columbia, prior to his new appointment.

A motor cycle and side car carrying two men and a box on its back, awoke the silence of Lake Louise December 28 when at nearly 6,000 feet altitude it roared around an improvised track at a speed above 50 miles an hour. It was the first time in history that a motor cycle has been on Lake Louise; the first motor cycle skijoring that has taken place there and the first time a motor cycle has travelled under its own power from the Prairies to Lake Louise in the depth of winter.

On the stroke of midnight of December 31st last one of the most remarkable railroad careers in the Maritime Provinces ended with the retirement of Charles H. S. Henderson, dean of Canadian Pacific Railway conductors. Mr. Henderson became a train conductor in 1878, at the age of 17 on the New Brunswick railway between St. Stephen and Edmundston. He completed 54 years of service with this railway and the C. P. R. December 31. He has been conductor on the trains of three successive presidents of the Canadian Pacific.
